
Diagnostic Psychological Testing

Psychological testing is available to enrolled students who are currently taking classes. Completing testing can be helpful for students who are struggling to pay attention in class, can't recall the information they study, have trouble with reading and comprehension, and have trouble with math. Additionally, testing can be useful when students feel anxious while taking exams, when they struggle with motivation and procrastination, and when they have trouble turning in assignments on time. The Counseling Center works in conjunction with the Center for Accommodation and Access to help students obtain accommodations in their classes if testing indicates that they qualify for them. The Counseling Center charges a fee depending on the type of testing, so please call for more information.
