379085	Spring 2018	ACCT 4141	1986 vs. 2017/2018 Tax Legislation: History, Response, and Effects	In this project, I will be analyzing the new tax legislation passed in 2018 with the 1986 tax legislation being used for once more for the current tax season by comparing and contrasting the tax liabilities created by both tax legislations on the median taxable incomes for each tax bracket. In addition to the calculations, the accompanying paper will look at the history of both tax reforms, provide a brief written analysis comparing the two reforms' effects on the tax liabilities calculated for each median income, and the U.S. citizens' perceptions and responses to the tax reforms.
385082	Spring 2018	ACCT 4141	Tax policy in Reaganomics and Trumponomics.	This is an economic and general analysis regarding the impact the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act will have on Americans. The differences in history, political environment, and economics will be compared with both the previous and new tax law. Historical differences will include the health of the economy the tax laws were passed in, and the past results of the former tax reform compared to the projections of the new tax reform. Political environment includes discussion of both the Reagan and Trump administration, the congressional parties in power, and other political tensions and influences that pushed the tax laws into place. Economics of both tax reforms will be contrasted in monetary differences, which will provide explanation of the potential benefits or consequences to working families in America.
